Urahuasha (6°27'37"S 76°20'01"W) is located on the external border of the Área de Conservación Regional Cordillera Escalera, which is a ~1500 km² protected area located on the northeastern Andean range in Peru (Cordillera Oriental). In 1992, the Urahuasha sector was established by the local farmers to safeguard an area of ~700 ha in the Shilcayo valley. It is now comprised of ~50-year-old secondary forest with only 4% of the area being allowed to be used for extensive agriculture. We visited Urahuasha twice, first during the rainy-season of 2021/22 from October to February and second during the dry-season of 2022 from June to September.

Mist netting was done almost daily in open forest, field openings, or shrubbery close to paths, as part of a project aiming to study the predation behaviors of insectivorous birds. The nets, placed from the ground up to ~3 m, were opened in the early morning and checked on hourly intervals until ~5 PM. Every caught bird was measured, photographed and feather samples were taken and stored at the Museo de Historia Natural, University of San Marcos in Lima. The birds were either released immediately or kept in captivity for a maximum of ~30 hours for behavioral experiments and afterward released at the same locality in favorable weather conditions.
